Roots are traced for traditional correlative cosmology and astrology as far back as the Neolithic and early Bronze Age into their flowering within early states and empires during the 1st millennium BCE, such as the Spring and Autumn and Warring States periods, followed by the Han Dynasty, roughly contemporary with the Romans. These ancient origins (supported by analysis of textual, epigraphic ...

Hellenistic Astrology. Hellenistic and Late Antiquity astrologers built their craft upon Babylonian (and to a lesser extent Egyptian) astrological traditions, and developed their theoretical and technical doctrines using a combination of Stoic, Middle Platonic and Neopythagorean thought. Astrology offered fulfillment of a desire to systematically know where an individual stands in relation to ...

Early Irish Astrology: An Historical Argument. by Peter Berresford Ellis. In all histories of western astrology there is a curious omission. There are no references to early Irish, nor - indeed - ancient Celtic, astrological practices. In fact, the only serious scholarly study on Celtic astrology was published in a French academic journal in 1902. This dissertation, in the light of modern ...

The early Chinese, Babylonians and Greeks were chiefly interested in how the Sun, Moon and planets moved through the patterns the stars made on the sky. A main aim was astrological predictions. But each culture grouped stars in different “constellations,” and astrologers were never able to agree on a system for prediction. Astrology was a grand first attempt at cosmology — that is, a ...

In cosmology, recombination refers to the epoch at which charged electrons and protons first became bound to form electrically neutral hydrogen atoms. Recombination occurred about 370,000 years after the Big Bang (at a redshift of $z = 1100$). The word "recombination" is misleading, since the Big Bang theory doesn't posit that protons and electrons had been combined before, but the name exists for
